Manager's Commentary

The Japan equity market extended its gains in October 2017, as the TOPIX Index appreciated by 5.45%. Solid earnings prospects for the Japanese corporate sector and stabilising political conditions appeared to support investor sentiment. International investors were net buyers during October.

Sector and stock price activity was heavily influenced by the start of corporate earnings announcements for the first half of 2017 from late October, with strong results from some manufacturing sectors, which also led the October rally. Electronics and Capital Goods sectors outperformed, while the Automobile and Commodities sectors lagged behind amid quality control scandals involving several large companies.

Recent economic data from Japan has been generally flat. Production activity faltered after a period of solid momentum, while the Industrial Production Index declined by 1.1% (mom) in September 2017, partly due to the base effect given the strong increase during the month before. Household consumption declined by 0.3% (yoy) in September 2017, which is yet to indicate a clear bottoming out of consumption activity in Japan.

The snap election for the House of Representatives on October 22nd returned the Liberal Democrat/ Komeito coalition with a similarly overwhelming majority. The new Abe administration's policies are unlikely to change substantially and a cabinet reshuffle is unlikely. One additional economic policy was a pledge to increase child educational subsidies paid for by the proposed consumption tax hike in 2019.

The Fund may participate in new issuances of securities ("New Issues"), and a portion of the Fund's returns consequently may be attributable to its investment in New Issues. The market value of New Issues may fluctuate considerably due to factors such as the absence of a prior public market, unseasoned trading, and the limited availability for trading and limited information about the issuer. When a composite's asset base is small, New Issues may have a magnified impact on the Fund's performance. As a fund's assets grow, it is probable that the effect of the composite's investment in New Issues on its total returns may not be as significant, which could reduce the Fund's performance. There is no guarantee that the availability or economic attractiveness of New Issues will be consistent from year to year.
